THE SURRENDER OF POLITICAL OFFENDERS AT GIBRALTAR. A preminent topic of the day is a diplomatic "difficulty" in which the indiscretion of a subordinate agent has involved the Government. The point in controversy raises great questions of principle and even of national honour. The Spanish Government appear to have refused to return to the English authorities in Gibraltar the Cuban insurgents who were so unfortunately handed over to the Spanish officials by the British police. This, necording to the official journals of Madrid, was the decision of the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs, and that decision it appears, has been approved by the King and the Ministers in Council. The refugees arrived at Gibraltar on August 20th by the English steamer Heroules, from Tangier. On their landing the police demanded their passports, and they were without any: Then, instead of refusing them admission to the garrison in consequence of their having no passports, the refugees were placed in two cars, with two policemen and an inspector of police, and taken to the English frontier, where they were compelled to dismount and were left. The Spanish officlais, who were in waiting, arrested them immedistely upon the spot, which is within twenty yards of the British sentry. The neutral territory is supposed not to be less than one hundred yards between the English and the Spanish sentries; consequently this proceeding of the Spaniards is an infringement of the neutral zone. So far the Spanish Government has declined to consider by what means the Gibraltar police were induced to take so grave a determination in connection with escaped prisoners who are admitted to be political offenders. Those are the facts of the case with which Her Majesty's Ministers have to deal. The revolution which took place in Spain under the late Marshal Prim, and which was for a time successful, was followed by a rising in Cuba against Spanish rule in that island. Cuba had never at any time accepted Spanish dominion, and each succeeding Caban insurrection found sympathisers more or less active in the United States. A few days ago, says the Architect, M. Bartholdi, the designer of the colossal status of "Liberty Edlightening the World," which is to be erected near New York in commemoration INCORPOBATED BY ROYAL CHARTER OF RIS of the American War of Independence, entertained a party of his friends at impoheon. The table was laid in the lower folds of the drapery of the figure. The weight of the figure will be about 150 tons; the height from head to foot about 110 ft. The cost of execution will exceed £18,000, and the work will require five years for
